EQUINE EXPERIENTIAL COACHING SAFETY GUIDELINES:

1. Safety around horses is a continual, ongoing process, that includes your active participation and awareness. While we will point out some physical safety tips to keep in mind, there is no class, or training session that will guarantee your safety. You must play an active role in your safety by trusting your feelings and instincts to guide you through this process. Be present, aware, and mindful of your environment / surroundings.
2. Horses are prey animals and therefore ultra sensitive to their environment and surroundings. They are creatures of reaction. Be aware that they may react to outside stimuli by moving quickly, kicking, or nipping. If a horse moves its feet, you will need to adjust your feet and position accordingly to avoid being stepped on.
3. Please listen to the horse! How do you do this? By paying attention to your own instincts, and by observing what the horse is telling you with its body movement, positioning, and energy.
4. We encourage you to wear a hat, sunscreen, long pants, and boots (if possible) to your session. If you do not have boots, you may wear sneakers. *Please do not wear steel-toed boots.
5. We encourage you NOT to wear sunglasses, as the horse may want to observe your eyes.
6. Please do not walk under any part of the horse.
7. When standing or walking around a horse's rear or hindquarters, be aware that maintaining close contact is always safer than being a short distance away—where you could get kicked or accidentally be knocked down if the horse startles in your direction. If you are touching the hindquarters, the horse will know you are there, and you can move with the horse.
8. During your session, you will be given a lot of freedom to greet and spend time with a variety of horses, but please do not approach a horse without first asking permission from your Equine Experiential Coaching Facilitator.
9. Please do not hand feed our horses. As much as they love treats, they also appreciate your attention and affection.
10. Please bring water to stay hydrated during the session.
